

Another week gone

Last weekend I celebrated Easter. It was very strange because I couldn't go and see my family like I normally do and made me feel a little sad. We had a nice video chat though which made me feel a bit better. I'm sure lots of you are missing your friends and family too, some of you would also have celebrated special events, like birthdays, in unusual ways. Please don't feel like you are alone, remember there are many people who know how special you are and look forward to seeing you again as soon as it's safe.

In the meantime, it is important to remember how lucky we all are. Think about all the brave people who are working to keep us safe and you are helping too by making sensible choices and acting so grown up.

Don't forget you can always share messages by asking your parents to help you send an email to parentconnect@iqra.slough.sch.uk.

There are other ways of sharing too, you could make cards for your friends or write them an email or letter to give them when you see them next.

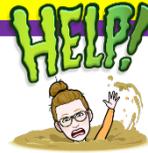

Just remember it is important to talk about how you are feeling. If you are happy, sad, worried, or anything at all there will always be people who will listen to you.

Help needed!

This week since the weather has been so warm it has felt like summer. That gave me an idea and I have begun to write my own book. It's going to be an A-Z of summer (so A is for... B is for...)

I'm a little bit stuck though because I can't think of a word for every letter of the alphabet.

Can you help me think of some summer related words?

Plant update

I thought you would like to see how quickly my plants are growing. The sweet peas have begun to grow already, how amazing is that!!

Why do you think my snapdragons haven't started to grow yet?

Book of the week

This week I have been reading '5 children and it' by E. Nesbit. It's a story about appreciating what you have and being careful about what you wish for. It was written over 100 years ago, isn't that amazing?

At the moment you can listen to the audiobook (and more) FREE at

<https://stories.audible.com/start-listen>

If you found a sand fairy what would you wish for?

We have a new leader!

I found a really cool website where we can all have a competition. You can see how many points you can get for answering multiplication questions.

I looked at 1 2 5 10 times tables and scored 239 points.

Creative corner

This week I managed to find some clay and have been practicing making things. So far, I have made some animals to decorate with and soap dishes because my soap keeps getting stuck to the shelf!

If you want to have a go at making some models did you know you can make your own clay (it's called salt dough) with just salt, flour and water? You can find instructions how to do it here:

Send me pictures of your creations!
