

Greta Thunberg Speaks at UK Parliament

Who is Greta Thunberg?

- Greta Thunberg is a 16-year-old climate change activist, who comes from Sweden.
- She has inspired many young people around the world to protest against climate change.

Greta Thunberg spoke to members of parliament yesterday, urging them to take action now to tackle climate change. The Swedish activist has been in London to talk to members of the Extinction Rebellion.

It's a series of protests in the capital city to draw people's attention to climate change. In a speech to protestors, she said that politicians had "got away with not doing anything at all" to combat climate change.

The 16-year-old campaigner first came to the world's attention when she skipped school in Sweden every Friday. Instead, she would protest outside the Swedish parliament against climate change. Her actions have inspired many young people around the world, not just in Sweden. In the UK and Australia, children have participated in climate change protests.

However, some politicians have said that children should not be skipping school to protest. In their opinion, nothing is more important than receiving an education.

Climate change is the changing weather and rising temperature of the Earth. Most scientists believe it's caused by human actions, such as burning fossil fuels for energy. It's been linked to more extreme weather as well as changes in how animals behave.

Many scientists believe that the next few years are crucial in tackling its effects.

take action now. Protests against climate change have been happening for over a week in London.

On Monday, about 100 protestors laid down at the Natural History Museum, a popular visitor attraction about animals, to illustrate how species are being affected by climate change.

However, the mayor of London, Sadiq Khan, said that while he too wanted action on climate change, he was worried about how much time London's police force was spending on the protests.
